The quality of mercy is not strained ;

It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven

Upon the place beneath. It is twice blest ;

It blesseth him that gives and him that takes :

'Tis mightiest in the mightiest ; it becomes

The throned monarch better than his crown.

COVID–19 has changed our personal and public life in a way that we had never imagined. The impact of the pandemic is huge and every aspect of human life is under deep stress throughout the World. Today, we are mostly stuck in our homes because of the COVID–19 pandemic, communicating with friends and co-activists online. We are unable to attend Offices, Schools and Colleges, gather in crowds and travel freely. But sitting at home and studying while seeing all death and suffering caused by the economic situation is really depressing. Actually, the virus is not only attacking our physical health, it is also increasing psychological suffering. A proper mental health enables us to lead rich and fulfilling lives and to participate fully in our communities. Even without the pandemic, it is estimated that one in six of us generally suffer a mental health issue during our lifetimes. We are witnessing the loss of loved ones, anxiety at the loss of jobs, isolation and restrictions on movement, uncertainty and fear for the future. Newspapers editorials tell us daily that in future there will be a clear line of break, pre- and post-COVID-19 world order. In Indian context, after initial success in stopping the spread of this deadly virus, glaring scenes of human suffering of migrant labours have shocked us all. In order to utilize opportunities of a new world order, Indian policy makers need to focus on the well-being of labour class and peasantry. The present situation might seem hopeless and society might never be same, but that should not stop us from working toward a better future for everyone. We have to start working for this better future right now during the crisis.
